Collecting The Nesslets & Draglets

The Nesslets, a collection of cute green hatching dragons

The Draglets, the Nesslets' fiery relatives

These Fantasy Castles are an essential addition for the serious Nesslet and Draglet collector

Long ago in the remote Highlands, a clutch of eggs, sealed away since the dawn of time, hatched to produce the ancestors of the Nesslets and Draglets.

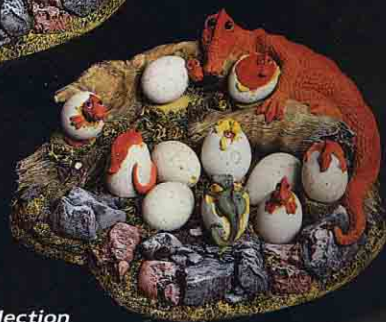

Over the eight thousand years since the retreat of the glaciers, those first few hatchlings have thrived and spread to any part of the world where deep lakes or lochs nestle midst heather clad hills and mountains.

All Nesslets and Draglets are affectionate by nature and can become extremely faithful through time. Their nests are made from peat stained driftwood and coloured pebbles and can be found under sheltered grassy banks on the shores of inland waters. The young hatchlings feed almost exclusively on yellow spring heather. When Nesslet collecting it is most important not to startle the mother and her young.

*The Nesslet nest.
The ideal present to inspire any collector*

Meet

The Geomites & The Footers

The Geomites are Tubit, Orbit, Cubit, and Tribit

Geomites, born from chaos, are intent on bringing order to the world. Each is available in four colours

These curious little creatures travel the cosmic void imprisoned in crusted Geodes which plummet Earthwards embedding themselves at journeys end. Therein they exist in gaseous form, dormant until the unwitting act of breaking the Geode ensures their release from their igneous prison: only upon contact with light do they change into solid form.

So repelled are they by their shapelessness in captivity that they are incensed into an immediate and relentless quest to introduce order from chaos and harmony from discord. This may also explain their love of pure geometrical shapes.

It is evident upon reflection that through the ages man has always been guided by the Geomites' example and although not always using their influence towards perfection – we know we can and should.

A group of changeling Geomites are preparing to escape from their Geode awaited by others, outside, who have already made the transformation

Geode Limited Edition

Mischievous and excitable, the Footers are coming. The stampede begins July 1991 onwards

In prehistory, the Geomites and Footers, early relatives, argued continually over the form that should be taken by water. The Geomites insisted that they should be able to sculpt it into rigid geometrical shapes while the Footers were emphatic that it must be random, flowing and formless. In the end both had their way and steam was created by the heat of the argument!

The Footers are full of character from every angle

In a petulant frenzy, the Footers set out to undo all the harmony created by the Geomites. Before the time of man, vibrant coloured frenzies (collective noun) of Green, Blue and Red Footers throbbed across the plains of the Earth, trampling all in their wake. The first victims were the Dinosaurs who were completely stamped-out within years of the Footer's arrival on Earth. Even fossils aren't safe from their mischief as they unearth them with their huge digging feet with such carelessness that most fossils found today are damaged, chipped or incomplete.

These days, if trouble is afoot or chaos abounds, maybe its time to track down the Footers.

Invoking The Gargoyles

These outlandish creatures are highly collectable

This highly prized Limited Edition Gargoyle is available to special order. The skill and expertise involved in the finish has to be seen to be believed

Each Gargoyle has a name based on old Scots. Skran represents hunger

Generated deep within the heart of our Earth is a mysterious power which is channelled through intricate vein systems which we now know as Ley Lines. Our wiser ancestors were aware of this awesome natural energy and treated it with the greatest respect.

As Man progressed, involving himself in more worldly affairs, he gradually lost the Earthly wisdom possessed by his ancestors, forsaking The Knowledge for more material matters.

It was during this "progression" that the Gargoyles – outlandish creatures of implacable form – were invoked from their elemental plane of stone, to adopt the role of sentinels to preserve and protect the untapped energies.

Here, the Gargoyles remain, formidable watchmen, safeguarding this immense force until Man's irresponsibility is no longer in evidence. For only then can the Gargoyles permit the use of the power as it was intended – for the benefit of our Mother Earth.

The excellent craftsmanship can clearly be seen in every Gargoyle

The Dragonets

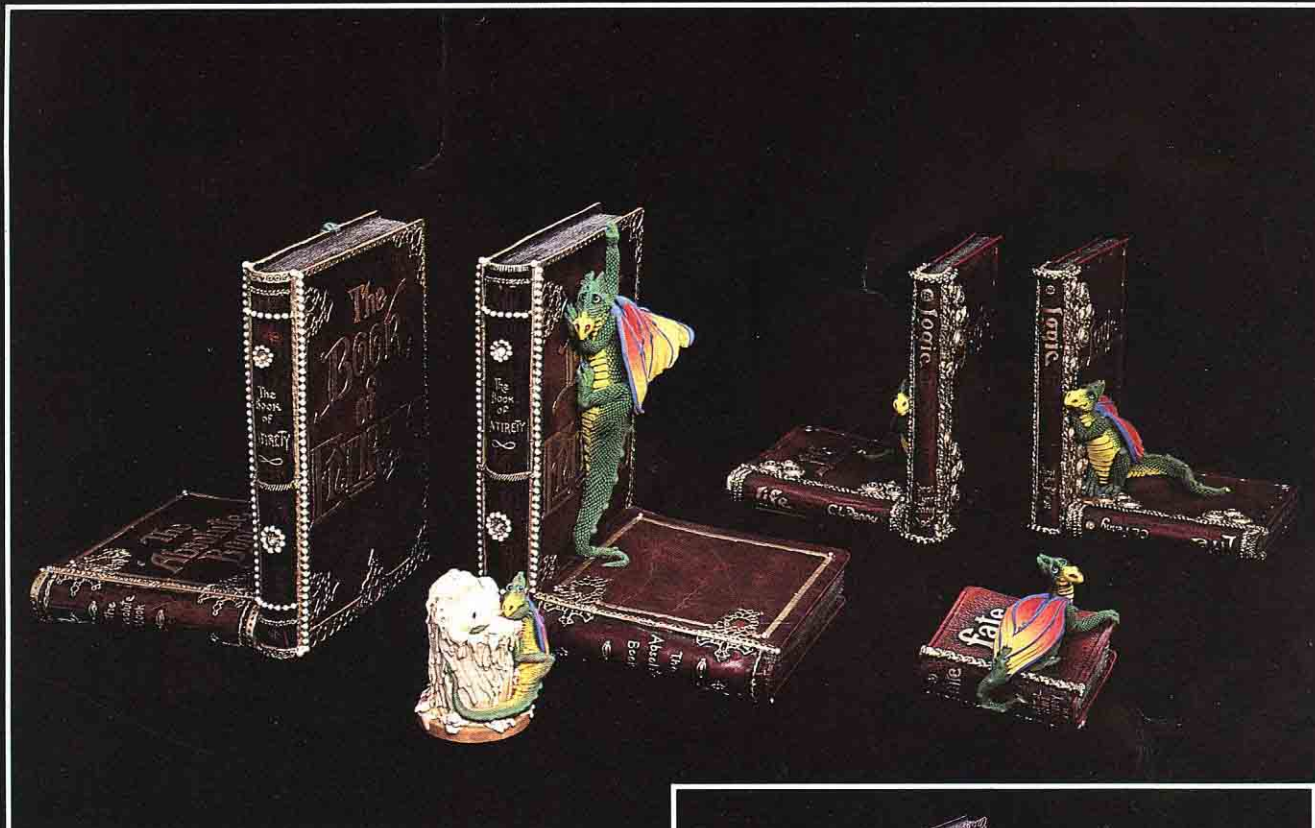

*I gazed from my window
 One cold, wintry night
 The moon cast its glow
 Of soft silver light.*

*In the crisp sparkling branches
 Of evergreens, I spied
 Many-coloured winged things
 That circled and cried
 Swooping and soaring
 In spectral display
 They engulfed me with awe
 Till the dawning of day.*

*They sought their fine fare
 Amidst foliage and leaves.
 As Dragonets I know them
 Of fruit they are thieves.
 With the purest of crystals
 They may be enticed
 To black shiny coals
 Or shards of blue ice.*

The Genesis Realm of Fantasy

Carol Lynn Penny was born in the beautiful Scottish city of St. Andrews in 1963 and was one of the founding directors of Genesis Creations Limited. In addition to her self-taught sculpting talents, she is also an accomplished water colour artist. Carol's love of strong and vibrant colours features in all of her work, but is particularly evident in her range of life-size Dragonets.

Many Genesis pieces also feature the synthetic geology of Neil Campbell which forms an important feature of the Gargoyle and Geomite Collections as well as certain Dragonets and Fantasy Castles. The Ice Dragonet (as front cover) is an excellent example of their combined work.

Genesis prides itself on some of the finest hand-painted fantasy figurines in the world. With each Dragonet, for instance, three colours are used to create the eyes, intricate blending of colours on wings and body, precision brushwork on fingers, toes and wing-bones. It is this attention to detail in the painting and not just the sculpting, that has made Genesis the name to collect. Additionally most dragon figurines are small models of huge dragons, Carol Lynn Penny's Dragonets are actual size, how else could they sit on a book or in a bag of nuts? The Genesis Realm of Fantasy will enthrall you for a lifetime.
